

NONVIOLENT DEMOCRATIC INSURRECTION: THE PEOPLE POWER REVOLUTION IN THE PHILIPPINES, 1986.

February 1, 6:30 PM
The event will be held via Zoom

The event is free and open to the public

In 1986, a nonviolent uprising over three days put an end to the right-wing military dictatorship of Ferdinand Marcos in the Philippines. The Catholic Church played a crucial role in the "People Power" revolution--images of nuns blocking tanks spread around the world. Catholic theologian Agnes Brazal took part in the uprising as a young person. In this online conversation, she will tell her story of those dramatic days, and discuss the wider implications for the Church's nonviolent defense of democracy in a world where democracy is increasingly threatened.

Agnes M. Brazal is a full professor of theology at the De La Salle University-Manila, Philippines. She was also a founding member and past President of DaKaTeo (Catholic Theological Society of the Philippines). Also, the first coordinator of Ecclesia of Women in Asia and currently planning committee member of Catholic Theological Ethics in the World Church.
