Dr. Joy St. John has led an extensive career in public health. She was the Chief Medical Officer at the Ministry of Health and Wellness, Barbados, for over twelve years. From 2012 to 2013, she was a chairperson of the Executive Board of the World Health Organization (WHO) and was the first Caribbean person to do so. From 2017 to 2019 she became the first Barbadian to be Assistant Director General for Climate and other Determinants of Health at WHO. Dr. St. John is currently the Executive Director of the Caribbean Public Health Agency (CARPHA). In this role, St. John is dedicated, reliable, and uses her experiences in global health to fairly serve her community.
