

Dylan Haber

Hometown

Chicago, Illinois

Recent positions include:

Project Developer, Engineer

About

I'm originally from Toronto and have worked for 7 years as an engineering project manager for building sciences and real estate. During this time, I led teams through on-site property assessments and prepared technical infrastructure analysis reports. Seeking to pivot my career towards sustainability, I moved to Chicago for the Sustainable Urban Development program, where I focused my studies on urban water and energy issues. Since graduation, I've worked at a renewable energy company called Engie, developing distributed solar power projects throughout the United States. In my spare time, I enjoy playing soccer, cycling, and watching basketball (Go Raptors!).

Notable memory

As a member of the first (and hopefully only) fully virtual Chaddick cohort, planning our events required an additional level of creativity. Faced with this obstacle, Joe was wonderfully resourceful and led us on several virtual "field trips" to spectacular places around the world that we could not possibly visit in-person. From the jungles of Thailand and Myanmar to the ruins of Nazi-conquered cities in France and the hometowns of each of our scholars, I was able to learn in detail about a variety of cities across the globe.